LAWS RELATING TO
FUR ANIMALS
FOR THE SEASON
1923-24

PELTS harvested from fur animals yield an income of many millions of dollars each year to the trappers of the country. They form the raw material on which is built the fur trade. This great industry, in catering to the wants of the many users of fur products, furnishes regular employment to thousands of people engaged in dressing skins, manufacturing them into garments, and distributing them through the various avenues of trade.

It is of vital importance to trappers and those engaged in the fur trade that fur resources be conserved, in order to continue a steady supply of peltries for the market from year to year, and at the same time make areas otherwise unproductive yield a substantial return in the utilization of natural wild food products.

The uncontrolled taking of pelts without regard to the resulting depletion of the breeding stock over vast areas has awakened interest in the conservation of fur-bearing animals and in the creation of fur preserves in suitable regions. Raw-fur buyers and manufacturers are coming to realize the importance of a sound conservation policy and are cooperating actively with the Biological Survey in plans for eliminating the wasteful practice of taking unprime skins and for improving methods of curing and shipping pelts.

Laws relating to fur animals are enacted with the end in view of perpetuating one of the most valuable of our natural resources. The information contained in this bulletin, the ninth annual publication on the subject, should be useful in promoting on the part of all concerned effective action to this important end.

LAWS RELATING TO FUR ANIMALS FOR THE SEASON 1923-24.¹

LEGISLATION OF 1923.

CHANGES in legislation relating to fur-bearing animals, or to bounties on predatory species, were made during 1923 in 31 States, Alaska, and 6 Canadian Provinces. The general trend of this legislation is not only toward prohibiting the taking of unprime peltries, but also toward safeguarding the breeding supply of fur animals in the wild. Several States shortened the trapping seasons and restricted the taking of certain species to a time far shorter than that ordinarily deemed the period of prime fur.

The seasons on muskrat were more generally restricted than on any other species. In Montana the season was closed for an indefinite period, in Utah muskrats received protection until 1925, and the trapping seasons were shortened in Maine, New Jersey, Illinois, Minnesota, North Dakota, Idaho, and Alaska. Vermont permitted fall and winter trapping of muskrats by opening the season on October 25 instead of March 15, and Connecticut lengthened the season 2 weeks.

From the standpoint of restrictions on trapping, Idaho adopted the most radical program. The season on marten, fisher, and fox was closed throughout the State for an indefinite time, and that on muskrat, otter, mink, and raccoon was closed in all but eight counties, where the animals may be taken during December, January, and February, with the exception that muskrats may also be taken on three specified lakes from March 10 to May 10.

Beavers, otters, and bears were protected in Arkansas until 1928 in all but three counties. Arizona continued the close season on beaver until 1925, and Utah continued protection on beaver, otter, and marten for an indefinite period. An open season of three months' duration was provided on beaver in Nebraska, but provision was made for trapping the animals, when damaging property, during two additional months under permit from the chief game warden. In New York beavers may be trapped during March in areas designated by the conservation commissioner. Oregon provided a four months' open season on beaver from November to February, inclusive, except on national forests and in five counties, during which time the animals may be taken under special license, fee $2. Wisconsin repealed the special law allowing beavers to be trapped in certain counties under permit from the conservation department, thus closing the State for an indefinite period. In Montana the fee for a permit to trap beavers doing damage was increased from $5 to $10, and in Minnesota the fee for tagging beaver skins taken under permit was reduced from $3 to $1.50. Under regulations of the United States Department of Agriculture, the Territory of Alaska was closed to beaver trapping until November 16, 1924. In Ontario beavers were protected until 1925 south of French and Mattawa Rivers and the season was shortened two weeks in the northern part of the Province.

Bears were protected in New York, and the open season fixed from October 15 to November 15, with a limit of one a season. Minnesota protected these animals, fixed the open season as October 15 to January 1, and prohibited the use of steel traps in taking them. Nevada afforded protection to bears and fixed the open season as November 15 to March 15. Pennsylvania prohibited the use of steel-jacketed bullets in killing bears. In Alaska, for the first time in many years, black bears have been given protection during July and August, in district 1.

Protection was afforded all fur animals in Nevada, other than beavers, formerly unprotected in the State, and the open season was fixed as November 15 to March 15. Raccoons, skunks, and civet cats were protected in Utah, and December 15 to March 31 was fixed as the open season. In Washington protection was given all fur animals except beavers and bears, formerly unprotected, and the open season made October 1 to April 1. Illinois was divided into three zones, and the seasons were shortened on all species of fur animals, except muskrats, one month in the northern zone, two months in the central zone, and two and a half months in the southern zone. South Carolina enacted a fur-tax law and fixed the trapping season from Thanksgiving Day to March 1. Open seasons were shortened one month on all species in Missouri; one month on skunk, mink, muskrat, and otter in New Jersey; and two weeks on raccoon in Ohio. Minnesota and Wisconsin were closed to raccoon hunting and trapping.

Licenses to trap fur animals were provided as follows: A $10 trapping license is now required in Montana, but is issued only to holders of a $2 resident general hunting license. In Delaware a hunting license is required to trap on lands of another outside of the county of residence. Hunting licenses are required to trap fur animals in Nevada—fees, resident citizen, $1.50; nonresident citizen, $10; they are not required, however, of minors under 14 years of age nor of persons trapping on their own lands. In New Jersey a hunting and fishing license is required to trap. Utah prescribed a special $5 trapping license, which is issued only to resident citizens over 16 years of age; and Washington now requires a license to trap coyotes, muskrats, minks, skunks, martens, civet cats, and weasels, as well as other fur animals,

The fee for a trapping license in Wisconsin was reduced from $2.50 to $1, all traps are required to be tagged with a 5-cent tag, and the special 25-cent license formerly issued to boys was abolished. Fur buyers were required to take out licenses in Minnesota, Missouri, and Pennsylvania. In Alberta a resident trapping license was prescribed, and the fees were increased for licenses to fur dealers. In the Northwest Territories, the fees were trebled for nonresident trappers and fur buyers.

A license, fee $2, is required in Connecticut to breed fur animals in captivity, and Wisconsin enacted special laws on beaver, muskrat, and skunk farming.

New Mexico and South Dakota discontinued the payment of State bounties and appropriated $70,000 and $30,000, respectively, for the next biennium for cooperation with the Biological Survey in the destruction of predatory animals.

Missouri provided a bounty of $10 on wolves and coyotes, and $5 on wildcats, but also appropriated $15,000 for the use of the State board of agriculture during the biennium in cooperation with the Biological Survey in destroying predatory animals, and empowered the State game department to expend funds at its disposal in further cooperation.

In Montana the payment of bounties was placed under the jurisdiction of the State livestock commission, which was empowered to levy a tax of 1½ mills on each dollar of assessed valuation of livestock for this purpose and for cooperation with the Biological Survey in organized effort for the control of predatory animals destructive to livestock and game. The State game departments of both Montana and Idaho were also required to set aside 25 cents out of each license fee as a fund to be used in destroying predatory animals.

The payment of bounties has been discontinued in Michigan, and the destruction of predatory animals is carried on by the State conservation commission in cooperation with the Biological Survey.

Washington made no appropriation for payment of bounties, but appropriated to the State department of agriculture $25,000 for cooperation with the Biological Survey in destroying predatory animals, and made provision also that whenever amounts in the county domestic-animal protection funds derived from licenses on dogs exceed $200 the excess shall be transferred by the board of county commissioners to a wild-animal account, to be used by the department of agriculture for the destruction of predatory animals in such county.

Missouri restricted the possession and transportation of green pelts to the open season, but permits dry pelts to be shipped also during the first 10 days of the close season, provided that all shipments are marked on the outside to show the contents of the package and the name and address of the shipper. Permits must now be obtained in Montana for all shipments of furs going out of the State, and in South Carolina the transportation of furs is prohibited unless each skin is tagged. Nebraska permits the possession and transportation of green hides during the open season and 30 days thereafter.

Trappers were required to render annual reports of their fur catch in Massachusetts and Pennsylvania, and, while not required by law, the game commission of West Virginia is endeavoring to collect data on the number of animals killed by listing the game, birds, and fur animals of the State on hunting licenses and requesting hunters and trappers to make necessary reports at the end of the calendar year.

The Bureau of Biological Survey is heartily in favor of requirements and efforts of this kind and is giving every aid to State game departments to encourage legislation which will require hunters and trappers to make returns on the animals taken. Such requirements may very properly be enforced in connection with the granting of licenses by insisting upon such reports before another license will be issued. Information to be derived in this way is much in demand and is of the utmost importance to the development of a sound program for the conservation of fur animals, but under present conditions reliable statistics are obtainable to only a very limited extent. The Biological Survey has prepared suggestions for the use of State game departments in formulating legislation which will meet satisfactorily the requirements along this line.

The Territorial Legislature of Alaska enacted a comprehensive law for the registration and protection of blue-fox brands and marks, which should be of material assistance to the blue-fox-farming industry there. Fur taxes and license fees on fur dealers were reduced, and the bounty on eagles was increased from 50 cents to $1.

The blue-fox ranching industry has developed extensively, especially in the southern and southeastern parts of the Territory; increasing interest is being manifested in it, and good prices are received by fox farmers for pelts. An experienced representative of the Biological Survey spent three months during the year visiting Alaskan fox farms and studying conditions on the islands in the southeastern and south central parts of the Territory, including the Kenai Peninsula. In response to a joint call issued by the Biological Survey and the Forest Service, fox farmers met for the purpose of discussing the problems involved in their work and establishing necessary organizations. Prompt action was taken and associations of blue-fox farmers were formed with headquarters at Cordova and Petersburg, with a view to improving conditions in this industry.

In order to control wolves, which were proving destructive to the deer in southeastern Alaska, a representative of the bureau was detailed to investigate the situation. Methods of poisoning and trapping which were highly effective under Alaskan conditions were determined, and plans are now being put into effect to continue the work on a larger scale during the coming year.

The educational work conducted by the bureau is rapidly developing a favorable attitude toward the protection of the land fur-bearing animals in Alaska. A survey of conditions in the Kuskokwim district early in 1923 shows that fur animals, with the possible exception of beavers and martens, are more than holding their own, and warden service will be extended into this district in the near future.

The United States game wardens of the Biological Survey have continued checking up shipments and receipts of furs by the principal fur houses throughout the country, and the evidence of numerous illegal shipments thus uncovered has been referred either to Federal authorities for prosecution under the Lacey Act, which regulates interstate traffic in wild animals, or to State game officials for prosecution in State courts. The cooperation rendered by the bureau in cases where furs were illegally shipped out of the State has resulted in the imposition of State fines and penalties totaling several thousand dollars.

SUMMARY OF LAWS.

In many States legislation for the protection of fur animals has not progressed to the stage of stringent regulation, and this condition, together with the peculiar commercial nature of the fur industry, makes it often exceedingly difficult to determine what restrictions, if any, apply to the transportation and marketing of furs.

In stating the open seasons, the plan has been followed, as in the bulletin on the game laws,² to include the first and the last days thereof. Statements regarding trapping on lands of another do not take into consideration the general trespass laws of the State. The bounty laws included relate to all animals and birds on which bounty is paid.

Federal Laws.

Two Federal laws have a bearing on the fur industry of the United States—the Lacey Act, governing interstate commerce in wild animals, and the tariff act of September 21, 1922.

That part of the Lacey Act codified as section 242 of the Criminal Code (35 Stat. 1137) makes it unlawful to ship or transport "from any State, Territory, or District of the United States to any other State, Territory, or District thereof" the bodies or parts of bodies of any wild animals killed or shipped in violation of the law of the State, Territory, or District in which killed or from which shipped.

The tariff act of September 21, 1922, places a duty of 15 per cent ad valorem on all live wild animals shipped into the United States. This includes silver and black foxes, the skins of which, dressed or undressed, and manufactures thereof, are dutiable at 50 per cent ad valorem. Other furs dressed on the skin, not advanced further than dyeing, are dutiable at 25 per cent ad valorem. Raw furs and skins (except silver and black fox skins) are admitted free.

The regulations of the Department of Agriculture for the inspection and quarantine of foxes and restricting their entry to certain ports have been rescinded, and foxes free from disease may now be brought in at any port on presentation of the regular importation permits. This, however, does not exempt foxes from the duty imposed by the tariff act.

Throughout Territory:

Beaver, sea otter.....	No open season. ¹¹
------------------------	-------------------------------

Prohibited methods: Unlawful to take or kill land fur animals with poison or by use of trap or device known as the "klips," steel bear trap, or any other trap with jaws having a spread exceeding 8 inches; to take protected fur animals, except bears, with aid of dog, or foxes, minks, martens, land otters, weasels, muskrats, or beavers with aid of artificial light. Unlawful to destroy beaver houses or runways.

Licenses: Stationary fur buyer, $15; traveling agent for stationary fur buyer, $15; traveling fur buyer, $100; issued by commissioner; fur buyer must also pay license tax on each pelt, as follows: Sea otter, $3; silver fox, $2; black fox, $2.50; blue fox, 75 cents; polar, brown, and grizzly bear, and cross fox, 50 cents; black bear, beaver, marten, land otter, red and white fox, lynx, 25 cents; muskrat and weasel, 2 cents; pelt not specifically mentioned, 10 cents. No license required for trapping, but trapper sending or removing furs from Territory must pay license tax on such skins and must keep record of all pelts taken and make annual report to commissioner on or before August 1, showing to whom and when sold or disposed of; and must pay tax on all pelts not sold to licensed fur trader in Territory.

Possession and sale: No restrictions on prime skins legally taken, except that it is unlawful to sell the heads or hides of moose, deer, caribou, sheep, goats, and brown bears. Blue-fox skins must be tagged or branded before being sold.

Shipment and export: No restrictions on prime skins legally taken, if license taxes are paid before transportation. Blue-fox skins, whether acquired in Territory or imported, must be tagged (fee, $1.50) by commissioner. Shipments of furs consigned to points outside of Alaska should be reported to the Bureau of Biological Survey, Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.¹²

¹⁰ District 3 includes the region drained by the streams entering the Arctic Ocean north of the sixty-eighth parallel of north latitude.

¹¹ Season on beaver expires November 16, 1924, and on sea otter November 15, 1925.

Propagation: No restrictions except that on the Aleutian Islands Reservation and certain other islands. permits to use the islands for fur farming and to trap fur animals for breeding purposes must be obtained from the Department of Agriculture. Fur farmer must obtain Territorial License, fee $10, and pay Territorial license tax on each pelt sold. Issued by commissioner. Blue-fox farmer must register brand, fee $10.

Bounties: Wolf, $15; eagle, $1.
